

Handwritten text in Devanagari script, likely a religious or historical inscription, inscribed on the inner rim of a golden bowl. The text is arranged in several lines, following the curve of the bowl's rim. The script is dark, possibly black ink or a dark metal patina, and shows signs of wear and fading. The text is written in a traditional style, with some characters appearing to be in a different script or dialect, possibly indicating a specific regional or religious context. The text is arranged in several lines, following the curve of the bowl's rim. The script is dark, possibly black ink or a dark metal patina, and shows signs of wear and fading. The text is written in a traditional style, with some characters appearing to be in a different script or dialect, possibly indicating a specific regional or religious context.